

My favorite king as a child

I'm no American which you might already know but I'm saying this in case anybody just skipped to this part

My favorite King was Vakhtang Gorgasali

He was a Beast and you could even say that literally, he was 7.8 feet tall had a giant sword that he fought people with until the age of 60

AGE OF 60

Even Nowadays people die at 70

He was still out there fighting for his people hundreds of years ago

His determination wasn't shown just by that

He was a hard worker because he was born in the hardest of times, his father was dead and his country was purged by the enemies it was surrounded by

That showed me that the hardest of times could bring the strongest of wills and strongest of people

If you compare the size of Georgia on the map to when he was born to when he died you might see a... significant difference

He also built churches that are here to this day and developed Tbilisi our capital city

If you didn't know tbili (თბილი) actually means warm and he called it Tbilisi because his hunting hawk fought a pheasant and both birds died falling on the warm springs

That's when he decided to clear out the trees and build a city there

At the time Qutaisi was our capital city... at least that's what I remember

Still he was pretty much like a perfect person in my eyes

A person who worked hard, reading books thousands of times adding a cross every time he finished, training himself every single day while his mother took control of the bad situation and guess what

He became a King at age 16

Yep

Back then I was surprised and now I'm even more shocked because I'm the same age... actually I'm not shocked at all

He actually worked while I was sitting on my butt watching Markiplier swear at bean brands

But to me he was very inspirational

I am pretty much doing disservice telling his story because I can't tell crap accurately

I pretty much talked about all I remembered learning about him... half a decade ago
